The KING has been pleased to award the Albert Medal to Mr. Walter Cleall, of Cardiff, a demobilised soldier, in recognition of his gallantry in saving life at a fire at Cardiff in August last.

On August 11th a fire broke out at the top of the Royal Hotel, Cardiff, and it was not until the sixth floor of the building was burning fiercely that one of the maids was seen to come to a window on that floor and gesticulate for help. Mr. Cleall, who was in the crowd below watching the fire, at once entered the building without a smoke helmet, and eventually succeeded in getting to the sixth floor and into a room from which he could see the girl. From the window of that room he climbed along a narrow parapet, and reached the window where the girl was.

Above the ledge which afforded him foothold was a stone balcony for a part of the intervening space, but a very dangerous corner had to be negotiated with a sheer drop to the street of fully one hundred feet. The risk of falling was very great, but he succeeded in carrying the girl back along the parapet, and into the room from which he started. A portion of the roof collapsed as the girl was assisted from the room.
