

inherited. He made himself the personal representative of all his people in a fuller sense than any King or Queen who had gone before him. He loved his country with entire devotion, and he had no thought but for the care of his people everywhere.

All who knew my father will bear witness that he had in full measure those qualities of our race which have carried us triumphantly through past difficulties, and will, under God's providence, enable us to overcome those which confront us now. He was loyal, kindly, and unselfish; he had the loftiest conception of honour and duty. All these qualities grew out of the experience and habits of his youth, from a happy and affectionate home life, from the practice of the Christian religion formed in childhood, and from his training as a sailor in discipline and team work. We cannot honour him more than by showing each of us in our daily lives those essential virtues of courage, loyalty, true religion, devotion to duty, kindness and sympathy, which marked his whole life.

The sculptor has achieved a fine and worthy likeness of my father. In my own name, and on behalf of all the members of my family, I thank the National Committee, and, through them, all who have subscribed to and taken part in the preparation of this memorial for which my Government has accorded a noble setting. I now ask my Minister of Works to take it into his charge and to maintain it for all time.
